ORGANIZATIONS THAT CAN QUICKLY AND CREATIVELY ADAPT HAVE A COMPETITIVE ADVANTAGE

A growing number of forward thinking companies are training their employees in the same skills that enable a team of improvisational performers to create an unscripted scene on stage.

Improv in the office? Yes, and it's as beneficial as it is fun to learn.

Applying improv-based tenets of trust, communication and collaboration to the constantly changing stage of the business world has been proven to be effective in building stronger teams.

Comments from recent Advantage Improv training events include:

- “Loved it! Want more!”
- “It was a great experience.”
- “This was a master class in improv, working together, collaboration and trust. It was fantastic.”

This workshop is ideal for managers, individual contributors, business owners and entrepreneurs. It's also helpful for teams (ex: sales, marketing, product development, human resources, operations, etc.) to experience this workshop as a group.
